

Caglia Environmental Celebrates Earth Day at Fresno State

Students Learn about Recycling from Caglia Environmental

An educational booth featuring recycling information was a big attraction at Fresno State's annual Earth Day celebration. The booth featured information that encouraged students to learn all about recycling, and how it can help make Fresno State a more sustainable campus.

"We enjoy providing recycling education to Fresno State on Earth Day, and all year long," said Alan L. Davis, General Manager of Solid Waste and Recycling operations for the Caglia Environmental companies, including Fresno State's service provider, Industrial Waste and Salvage.

"This is a natural extension of our service to customers," said Davis. "Providing recycling education to our younger generation is part of the mission of all of the Caglia Environmental solid waste and recycling companies. The Caglia family-owned businesses practiced recycling for decades before it was a trend or the law."

The booth featured information about the State of California's recycling laws for business and schools, AB 341 and AB 1826, as well as recycling information for the average consumer.

"As a university, Fresno State is at the forefront of higher education in the Central Valley," said Davis. "It's natural that they should lead the way, in partnership with Caglia Environmental, in recycling education as well."
